

GREEK CANNERS' ASSOCIATION – EKE PRESS RELEASE

Naoussa - April 10, 2017 - Hopes are high this season for the production of cling peaches in Greece. Peach trees are currently in full blossom and farmers expect the best yield for some years now. However, it is too early for more specific predictions as anything may happen between today and harvest time.

Several years of less than excellent weather conditions pushed the Greek fruit canning industry to lower total productions, threatening its dominant position as the world's biggest exporter of canned peaches. A good crop this year will help the industry recover to its normal production and export levels.
